

Our World Book Day Story

By All of Charlton on Otmoor

Once upon a time, there was a magical place called Charlton on Otmoor. In this magical place there lived a ...

big magical bird, who lived with a princess and a unicorn.

One day they went for a walk (the bird of course flew!) They walked past the pub and popped in for a fruit shoot. (By FSU)

Then, they noticed an extraordinary playground where lots of laughing children were having fun with their friends.

Suddenly, there was a storm approaching, the big magical bird produced a magical spell to cast the storm away.

Whoosh! (By Y1/2)

Before she could cast the spell, an evil octopus appeared out of nowhere and cast a more powerful spell. Instead of the storm going away, it got so enormous that it nearly flattened the playground. There was octopus ink everywhere!

“It’s no use! The spell is too strong!” cried the unicorn.

They were clinging on to a lamp post and giving up hope, until a brave group of children from Year 3 and 4 formed a chain and pulled them inside to safety. (By Y3/4)

Mrs Cumming-Bruce then went out with a net and captured the evil octopus. He was locked in a cage in the PE shed.

A few months later, a sad broken-hearted octopus named Personification arrived at the school with a plan to prove Year 3&4 and Mrs Cumming-Bruce wrong. He was there to free his long lost twin, Alliteration.

With the help of their father, Metaphor, Personification approached the PE shed wielding his tentacles. He tore it open and freed Alliteration.

At that exact moment, the whole school came out for break. Alliteration apologised for what he had done, all he had wanted was to do a rain dance with the children.

The children quickly forgave Alliteration and asked the Octopi if they could play on their tentacles. The magical bird, princess and unicorn returned bringing fruit shoots for everyone. A cast a spell of eternal joy and friendship for everyone and they planted magical plants to protect the planet from bad thoughts. (By 5/6)
